Poetry of the Holocaust

The Butterfly

The last, the very last,
So richly, brightly, dazzlingly yellow.
Perhaps if the sun's tears would sing
against a white stone...

Such, such a yellow
Is carried lightly 'way up high.
It went away I'm sure because it wished to kiss the world goodbye.

For seven weeks I've lived in here,
Penned up inside this ghetto
But I have found my people here.
The dandelions call to me
And the white chestnut candles in the court.
Only I never saw another butterfly.

That butterfly was the last one.
Butterflies don't live in here,
In the ghetto.

Pavel Friedmann 4.6.1942

The poem is preserved in typewritten copy on thin paper in the collection of poetry by Pavel Friedmann, which was donated to the National Jewish Museum during its documentation campaign. It is dated June 4, 1942 in the left corner.
Pavel Friedmann was born January 7, 1921, in Prague and deported to Terezin* on April 26, 1942. He died in Oswiecim* (Auschwitz) on September 29, 1944.
*Terezin was a Nazi concentration camp.

Remember the Tulsa Race Massacre

May 31 marks the anniversary of the 1921 Tulsa Race Massacre. Here's why this history must be told.

May 31 marks the anniversary of the Tulsa Race Massacre. You can be excused if you've never heard of it. Despite being the bloodiest attack on African-American citizens in U.S. history, the riot was almost completely ignored by most history books for almost all of the 100 years since it happened. Only recently has the event received the attention it deserves.

In 1921, the Greenwood section of Tulsa, Okla., was one of the most prosperous Black neighborhoods in the country. Greenwood's nickname was "the Negro Wall Street." The discovery of oil in Tulsa in 1901 turned the city into a boomtown. In the 1910s, Tulsa's economic good times coincided with an exodus of African Americans from the Deep South called the Great Migration. Oklahoma was a Jim Crow state. But Black people wanted to cash in on the state's oil wealth like everyone else.
