Q10 D:

Some schools have turned to "grading for equity" to address racial disparities in grading. For example, Black or African American students are not getting as high of grades as White students or Asian students. Part of "grading for equity" is eliminating "zero" as a grade, even when a student assignment is not completed or turned in. Do you support or oppose this grading practice?

Q17:

A number of public-school districts across the country currently maintain official policies that assist students with "transitioning" to a different gender -- which includes using a different name and pronoun chosen by the child and allowing him or her to use locker rooms and bathrooms that correspond to this new identity. It also may include recommending a student visit a local clinic, where they can receive prescriptions for puberty blockers or hormone injections. As part of this process, some schools do not share this information with parents because they assert that families are not "safe" or that parents would not be "supportive." A training presentation for teachers in one Wisconsin school district stated "parents are not entitled to know their kids' identities. That knowledge must be earned."

Do you agree or disagree with that statement?
